Volume 2

In the modern globalized world, the economic development of a country is premised on its ability to develop, adapt and harness its potential to innovate. Most of the governments in developing and emerging economies, including India, are proactive in initiating policies that would promote a culture of innovation. India: Science & Technology, Volume 2 intends to identify the nature and extent of innovative activities in the country and the lacunae in its support mechanism. It also suggests suitable S&T interventions in the policy matrix in order that India could come to the forefront in innovation activities.

CSIR–NISTADS was set up by CSIR in 1981 to undertake research on policy, policy advisory and provide research support to national S&T agencies on science, technology, society and innovation challenges. Over the years, CSIR–NISTADS has emerged as the pioneering research organization in the realms of S&T policy research.
